World Parks, Inc. becomes major sponsor of the Darwin200 Project and Campaign

SAN FRANCISCO, CA - June, 2020 - World Parks, Inc. has officially become a major sponsor of the Darwin200 initiative. The Darwin200 initiative celebrates the 200th anniversary of the voyage of Charles Darwin's famous journey aboard HMS Beagle and focuses on environmental education and engagement. The culmination of this initiative will be a two-year journey on a tall ship with 200 budding scientists stopping at 50 of the same ports as Charles Darwin to provide scientific evidence of how natural and climatic conditions have changed since the initial journey.

The Darwin200 journey will provide the ideal classroom from which to demonstrate how humans and nature are part of the same ecosystem. Highlighting changing and threatened locations while showcasing resilient adaptations is important for scientists and the world to be aware of, and that is why World Parks made the decision to get involved with this important work.

World Parks has been involved with Darwin200 for the past several months but has recently officially joined as a sponsor of the voyage. David Markowitz, principal ecologist at World Parks said, "I believe that the Darwin200 initiative will highlight potential conservation areas and educate the next generation of scientists about the importance of climate change and conservation. We at World Parks are excited to be a part of this amazing project and look forward to the journey."

The Darwin200 initiative formally kicks off in August 2020 with a voyage around the United Kingdom and a week-long launch event in London at the end of September 2020.
